Filmed Jazz Chronicles

By NICHOLAS CATALANO

The value of the film and video chronicles of jazz has been underestimated – usually a parenthetical afterthought in small jazz festivals. But an evening spent with the Chertok collection (son Michael now carries on the tradition of his pioneer father, David) provokes a new sense of curiosity and inquiry about the worth of this footage.

The audience at Jack Klein's "Highlights in Jazz" last week was treated to a dazzling display of film and video reels of jazz performances in a program neatly hosted by Michael Chertok, who complemented the viewing with anecdotal commentary that was informative and entertaining.

Patrons saw Erroll Garner, in a 1964 BBC telecast, play an intro to "Honeysuckle Rose," disguising the tune so well that his sidemen grinned with frustration. TV dubs from a 1961 show where Louis Armstrong sings "I'm Confessin' That I Love You" illustrate both the awkwardness of early live TV and its refreshing candor. In a cut from a 1957 series called "The Sound of Jazz," some thrilling moments revealing Billie Holiday, Lester Young, Gerry Mulligan, Coleman Hawkins and Roy Eldridge show a cinema verite approach that provides many more dimensions than many of the era's poorly produced recording sessions.

Whether TV segments or film cuts, the sound quality of the collection is outstanding. The selections (especially the 50s film montages with Toots Thielemans, Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller and Artie Shaw) owe much to the pioneering efforts of early editors, producers and directors.

Even perfunctory examination of film and video reveals the challenges to artists not present in live performances. In an opera telecast, a singer's acting ability is much more susceptible to scrutiny in a close-up shot than it is to audience members in the balcony. In the Chertok reels, the musicians display a concentration, passion and intensity that often cannot be observed in live concert performances and are lost entirely on even the best recordings.

NEW YORK POST WEEKEND FRIDAY, MARCH 31, 1989

JAZZ
By CHIP DEFAA

HIGHLIGHTS at JAZZ NYU Loeb Student Center, 566 LaGuardia Place at Washington Square South, (212) 998-4999. Thursday's "Jazz Legends on Film" offers rare footage of 26 all-time greats (Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Armstrong, Billie Holiday, Tommy Dorsey, Cab Calloway, Gene Krupa) from the Chertok Archives, the world's largest jazz film collection.

INDOJO BLUES 221 W. 46th St., (212) 721-0033. Paquito D'Rivera's solo saxophone sings. His heartfelt playing is astonishingly fluid in all registers, and Claudia Rodis's cajón, elastic trumpet work provides an excellent complementary voice. Through Sunday. Recommended.
