The University of North Florida

The University of North Florida (UNF)....Opened in 1972, is one of the ten public institutions in the State University System of Florida. UNF is a comprehensive, urban university which offers degree programs at the undergraduate and graduate levels. As UNF's academic status grows, its single most distinguishing characteristic is personalized teaching.

When professors say to students, "Call me at home if you need help," you know what their focus is: the best undergraduate education possible. Because of this excellent faculty, each of UNF's five colleges has steadily gained prominence over the past two decades. Situated on a beautiful 1,000 acre nature preserve, with modern facilities and state of the art equipment, UNF offers a uniquely balanced experience for students and an education of the highest quality.

UNF HIGHLIGHTS

- One of 10 universities in the State University System of Florida
- Just under 11,000 students including students from over 100 countries.
- 44 undergraduate and 22 graduate degree programs.
- National award winning student advising system.
- One of six U.S. universities to offer 24-hour computerized job placement information, via telephone, to student and alumni.

The Differences?

UNF stands out from the crowd. The quality of programs is evident in the countless number of achievements each of the five colleges at UNF have acquired in an amazingly short period of time.

Some examples are:

College of Arts and Sciences

Students and faculty from the 25 undergraduate and 7 graduate degree programs in the college of Arts & Sciences receive recognition and awards on a regular basis. Faculty have performed at major jazz festivals, served as Fulbright professors, and received prestigious grants from a variety of sources including the NEH and NSF.

Students in many major disciplines are being admitted to competitive and reputable graduate schools throughout the nation. Students in the visual arts, mathematics, and music have won awards in national competitions; students in psychology, history, literature, and the natural sciences have published work in nationally-recognized journals; students in the social sciences and communications make meaningful contributions to the Jacksonville community through internships and class projects. Students from the new Pre-Law Program won the Best New Team award in national Mock Trial competition. This growing program has placed students in some of the best law schools in the US. Many students participating in the Pre-Medicine program have successfully gained admissions to a variety of professional medical schools.

College of Business Administration

While preparing students for the increasingly competitive business climate, the College of Business Administration has gained national recognition for its accounting graduates' performance on professional exams. In addition, the college has achieved national recognition for its undergraduate wholesaling curriculum, and a worldwide reputation for its International Center for Competitive Excellence Programs.

College of Computing Sciences and Engineering

Virtually all graduates of programs in the computing sciences and engineering enter into well-paid careers in their chosen field, many via the College's extensive community linkages in support of cooperative education for its students. All of the College's programs are nationally recognized for quality, with nationally accredited programs in computer science and electrical engineering, and an information systems program recognized by a national computer periodical as one of the top 6 programs nationwide for technical skills content. The College's students have routinely outperformed their counterparts from major universities in both national and international competitions.

College of Education and Human Services

The College of Education and Human Services offers programs that combine academic rigor and experiential learning. Graduates from the College maintain high passing rates on Florida teacher and principal certification examinations. All programs in the college include practical and other field-based experiences. Teacher preparation programs include field experiences in both beginning and advanced courses and culminate in a semester-long internship.

The college is accredited by the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education, one of the 11 teacher education programs in Florida to hold this distinction. All teacher certification programs in the college are approved by the Florida Department of Education.

College of Health

The College of Health's nursing and physical therapy programs are among the most sought after at UNF, and the high quality of these nationally accredited programs has resulted in consistently superior passing rates by graduates on national licensing examinations. The new sports medicine program is also very popular in a town as sports-crazy as Jacksonville. Almost all of the college's programs require internships or clinical experiences, which provide students hands-on experience and networking opportunities that are highly beneficial upon graduation.

Admissions: How to Apply

UNF encourages all qualified persons to apply regardless of gender, age, color, race, religion, marital status, national origin or disability. All applicants must follow these general procedures to apply:
