It was never about a hot dog and a Coke!, subtitled “A personal account of the 1960 sit-in demonstrations in Jacksonville, Florida and Ax Handle Saturday” recounts the events leading up to the fallout from the bloody events of August 27, 1960, infamously referred to as Ax Handle Saturday. On that day in downtown Jacksonville, Black youths who had been staging sit-in demonstrations at white lunch counters in downtown department stores, were attacked by more than 200 ax handle and baseball bat wielding whites. Written by former City Councilman Rodney L. Hurst, Sr., It was never about a hot dog and a Coke! is part memoir, part history and part biography, and provides an in-depth chronicle of Jacksonville’s social and political climate in the late fifties and early sixties.
