A Note from the General Editor

The Office of Undergraduate Research (OUR) is pleased to introduce the inaugural volume of PANDION: The Osprey Journal of Research & Ideas, an online journal of student research and creative project papers which span the academic disciplines at the University of North Florida (UNF). Volume 1 will comprise two issues: No. 1, released on July 31, 2020, and No. 2, released on August 31, 2020.

PANDION is not a peer-reviewed student research journal. Rather, each article in this volume was written by a UNF undergraduate or graduate student under the guidance of a subject matter expert – the faculty mentor named on the essay’s title page. Faculty mentors vetted, endorsed, and nominated outstanding papers for publication in PANDION, attesting that the paper had been revised to the mentor’s satisfaction.

Typesetting the essays and publishing the first volume of PANDION was a sustained group effort. I deeply appreciate and would like to acknowledge the dedicated work of Molly O’Brien and Kaitlyn Minnicks, OUR student project managers, and Rebeca Mata and Erica Sciacchitano, the PANDION student graphic design team. I am grateful for the assistance and consistent support of Courtenay McLeland, Head of Digital Projects and Preservation in UNF’s Thomas G. Carpenter Library and Digital Editor of PANDION, and Michael Boyles of the Center for Instruction & Research Technology (CIRT), PANDION’s Graphic Designer. We are especially proud to have produced PANDION during the pandemic, working separately and together, all collaborating remotely from our individual locations.

PANDION is interdisciplinary and publishes nominated articles which incorporate various citation styles (APA, MLA, Chicago/Turabian) according to the field. Any unfamiliar method of citation in this volume may have been a standard style modified by the student author, thus making it however inadvertently Uniquely UNF.

Happy reading and researching!
