WELCOME,
DELEGATES TO THE
NATIONAL BAPTIST CONVENTION.
SEPT. 7-14-1936

John T. Alsop
JOHN T. ALSOP
MAYOR
It is particularly fitting that the convention of the largest Negro religious denomination should hold its annual convention this year in one of the most interesting cities in the country, especially from the Negro angle.

The N. B. C. is meeting in a city in which the influence of the Negro on the history of the community has been felt and appreciated since before the days of the first City Fathers. As early as 1725 a United States army officer, attempting to march his troops into what was then called "The Cow Ford," complained to his superiors that the Indians who opposed him all the way down the Saint John's River were led "by Negroes, who are the most courageous fighters."

A century later, with the fully-established city becoming recognized as one of the fastest-growing Southern communities, we find nearly all of the artisans and skilled laborers of the city Negroes. Before the passage of another half century we find an almost all-Negro city government, with such high officials in state offices as the Secretary of State, Jonathan Gibbs, and a year or two later a Negro as state superintendent of education who is credited with having established the present state public education system.

The glorious history of the Negro in this convention city for 1936 has continued to the present day, as the figures and statistics on the following pages will show. In religion we have more than two hundred (200) churches; within a radius of one hundred miles are four of the five colleges for Negroes in the State. Of a total population of 146,259, for Jacksonville, 54,697 are Negroes; of the total Duval County population of 175,204, there are 60,636 Negroes.

Conservative estimates give over twenty thousand of these Negroes as normally working people, even in the past few "depression" years. The annual sum spent by these Negroes is more than thirty million dollars. A recent thorough survey of the city placed 2,428 of these employed and employable people in the category of male skilled workers; 576 as male "white collar" workers, and 2,511 as female skilled workers; 285 are school teachers; there are thirteen school principals. Jacksonville's area is 29.89 square miles of land; 9.17 square miles of water; total 39.06 square miles.
The city is situated on the beautiful St. Johns River and just 28 miles from the Atlantic Ocean. It is the gateway of the state which has 1400 miles of sea coast. Florida is the playground of the world.

Such unusual occupations as taxidermists, artists, licensed moving picture operators and Travelers Aid workers are to be found among the Jacksonville population; businesses and vocations of many and varied descriptions are being operated and practiced in this city.
