Here Comes Helen Humes!

By Ed Watkins

What better way to lead into fall than Helen Humes belting out "The Birth of the Blues"? One of the star attractions of Jack Kleinsinger's sixth season NYU "Highlights in Jazz" opener, Ms. Humes shared the spotlight with some other great jazz artists.

They included the inimitable Dick Hyman on piano, obliging Kleinsinger with a show-stopping stride solo, Eddie Daniels on saxophones and flute, George Duvivier on bass, Ron Traxler on drums.

A word about Eddie Daniels: He is one of the finest young jazzmen around. He could not only ride high on sax in such numbers as "Cherokee" and "They Say It's Wonderful" but provide a beautifully lyric flute rendition of "Emily" (which he also does on his delightful album "A Flower for All Seasons").

Helen Humes, of course, was a stand-out and, although "I Cried for You" and "God Bless the Child" were a bit overamplified, she really carressed the mike with Gershwin's "Embraceable You".

Speaking of Gershwin, the 80th anniversary of his birth did not go unnoticed at Crawdaddy, where the Dick Sudhalter Trio celebrated the occasion with an evening of that composer's best tunes. Sudhalter, as always performed with great style and feeling on cornet and flugelhorn, Mike Renzi had a chance to do some fine piano solos, and Don Reid is one of today's best drummers. Earlier in the month Sudhalter also led a quartet, with singer Barbara Lea, in a joyous week of Hoagy Carmichael music at the Citicorp Center's Atrium. He even sang one number, "Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief," in a most engaging fashion.

The Big Apple has also been graced recently with the presence of singer Lee Horwin, who came in from the Coast to delight audiences at Reno Sweeney, the Ballroom and the Atrium. This reporter caught her opening night return at Reno Sweeney where, in spite of the newspaper strike, her fans turned out to give her the tumultuous welcome she deserves. Here is a remarkable singer, with a very varied repertoire, who's worth hearing wherever she appears.

Well, the season's off to a flying start, and as the song says, we've only just begun!
