SOMETHING ABOUT "REGENERATION"

Violet Daniels, the only child of a widowed sea captain, is left an orphan by the death of her father. He leaves her a strange legacy in the way of a map showing the location of buried treasure on an Island in the South Pacific.

Jack Roper, who owns the fishing schooner, "Anna Bell," is in love with Violet. She enlists his aid to search for the Treasure Island. "Knife" Hurley, Mate of Jack's fishing schooner, is a villain who has managed to collect the scum of the waterfront for the Anna Bell's crew, with the intention of seizing the Treasure Chart and getting the treasure for himself.

A fight ensues in mid-ocean over possession of the Treasure Chart. A binnacle lamp is overturned and the ship is set afire. Knife Hurley secures the Treasure Chart and escapes with his crew in the only life boat, leaving Jack and Violet to perish. They construct a raft and launch it, saving themselves from the blazing ship.

After drifting for days on the sea and enduring hardships from thirst and hunger, Jack and Violet are cast upon an uninhabited island. Naming the island "Regeneration," they live on it like Robinson Crusoe.

By a strange trick of fate, Hurley and his cut-throat crew land on the Island of Regeneration and discover that it is the Treasure Island.

The ensuing scenes furnish a picture full of thrilling suspense amid a romantic setting.
