

Bill Clinton on Families

Excerpts from recent speeches by Governor Bill Clinton

If the New Covenant is pro-work, it must also be pro-family. That means we must demand the toughest possible child support enforcement. We need an administration that will give state agencies that collect child support full law enforcement authority, and find new ways of catching deadbeats. In Arkansas, we passed a law this year that says if you owe more than a thousand dollars in child support, we're going to report you to every credit agency in the state. People shouldn't be able to borrow money before they take care of their children.

Families with children deserve additional tax relief. The value of the tax exemption for children has dropped dramatically since World War II, while the tax burden and the cost of raising a family went up. In 1948, a typical family of four paid just 0.3% of their income in federal income taxes. Today, a similar family pays 30 times as much.

We need to stop taxing away the money parents need to raise a family, and restore the value of the children's tax exemption. We should replace the current $2,150 dependent's exemption with up to an $800 per-child tax credit, which would be equivalent to exempting from tax as much as $ 5,330 for a family in the 15 percent tax bracket. This change would mean additional tax savings this year of up to $480 per child for an average-income family.

We can pay for it without raising the deficit, by enacting a combination of spending reforms, such as cutting the $200 billion annual budget for the federal bureaucracy, and tax changes designed mainly to close tax loopholes for high-income people.

This change, along a 10% cut in middle class tax rates, would deliver real tax relief for those who work hard and play by the rules. Combining the impact of these two reforms, our plan would cut federal taxes for an average-income family with two children by as much as $1300.
