

A literary journal is a very unique object — a space within which writers from different origins and with distinct voices can meet. Each journal has its own personality, some broad and encompassing and others narrow and specific. Perhaps one thing which all journals have in common is possibility. Here (within) is a space where connections can be made — between stories, between authors and readers. That is, possibilities, imaginings, presented for you, Dear Reader.

We are pleased to present you with another diverse and beautiful issue. We invite you take a sip (and gulp)...

Warmest regards,
April
