Jazz: Woody Herman and Herd Review Highlights of His Career

By JOHN S. WILSON

WOODY HERMAN brought his Young Thundering Herd to Loeb Auditorium on Thursday evening ostensibly to help Jack Kleinsinger's "Highlights in Jazz" series celebrate its eighth anniversary. But while he was pointing up the longevity of this jazz series, Mr. Herman, who will celebrate his 45th anniversary as a band leader next November, was also able to re-emphasize the remarkable consistency of his own band, particularly in recent years, when it seems to be filled with new young faces almost every time it comes to town.

For the "Highlights" audience, Mr. Herman presented a program of highlights of his own career, from "Woodchopper's Ball," "Four Brothers" and "Early Autumn" to two more recent permanent additions to his repertory, Chick Corea's "La Siesta" and Gary Anderson's richly voiced arrangement of Gabriel Fauré's "Pavanne." Although these are pieces that Mr. Herman has been playing for from 5 to 40 years, they remain fresh because they keep going through the hands and horns of a steady stream of extraordinary young musicians who pass through the band and who keep refining and even improving on some of the original performances.

The present Herd manages the remarkable feat of playing the now-standard arrangement of "Early Autumn" with a slightly different deliberation of emphasis that gives it an even more luminous quality than it had before. The blend of woodwinds and piccolo trumpet on "Pavanne" seems to have developed a richer glow than it once had, and this trumpet section rips into "Caldonia" with a trip-hammer riff that is absolutely dazzling.

And Mr. Herman was pretty dazzling himself, in a quiet understated way. He was in the thick of everything, playing clarinet, alto and soprano saxophones and singing a Ralph Burns arrangement of "Sonny Boy" that generated a real swinging smack. It was a fine celebration for both Mr. Kleinsinger and Mr. Herman.

The other 15th took place in early February when the Mel Lewis Orchestra did a Monday at the Village Vanguard. It was in 1966 that the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis orchestra began appearing on Mondays at the Vanguard.

An 88th anniversary was celebrated at Jack Kleinsinger's "Highlights in Jazz" on February 5 at NYU's Loeb Student Center with two performances by Woody Herman and his Young Thundering Herd. Woody and the Herd will soon be in residence at the Royal Sonesta Hotel in New Orleans.

MUSIC

Woody Herman: Can it be true that the Knute Rockne of jazz will be retiring to New Orleans? Will the only Herd left trampling the wilderness be cows? Is this the first of a 1000 farewell concerts? Only Caldonia knows. February 5, Loeb Student Center, 566 LaGuardia Place, 598-3757. (Giddins)

Woody: in tune with the times

By GEORGE T. SIMON

For WOODY HERMAN, it's great to look back. But not to stare.
The veteran bandleader, who will appear three times in New York this month, appreciates all the good things that have happened to him during his 45 years as a maestro, but he refuses to live solely in that past. Instead, he insists on surrounding himself with young jazz musicians, many who could be his grandchildren, so that the music his band plays will always sound fresh and contemporary.

You can hear samples of all this tomorrow night during two concerts at 8 and 10 at Jack Kleinsinger's Highlights in Jazz series at NYU's Lionel Student Center. On Feb. 17, Herman will return to Roseland Ballroom, where his original band played in 1938 (with Count Basie's also new band on the opposite stage). Then, on Feb. 21, he'll be the main attraction at the New York Hilton for the Grammy Awards star-studded supper dance. Just this week his latest album, Woody Herman Presents a Concord Jam, was released.

The freshness of the latest Herman's Herd can be traced not only to its members' youthfulness but also to their astounding musicianship, attributable to the huge improvement in music education throughout the land.

"It's a long, uphill battle to get jazz accepted in schools," Herman says. "For years, we had to fight athletics for some sort of recognition in colleges and high schools."

Today there are more than 80,000 big bands playing in these institutions.

Like so many members of their generation, Herman's new musicians won't settle for the status quo. Which is why they're not likely to hear much of Woodchopper's Ball or Apple Honey or other Herman warhorses during its current concerts. Instead, the new charts now present more advanced harmonies and rhythms and even some outright experimental sounding things.

"So many of the musical barriers have been taken down," Herman notes, "you can do anything you want if you have the courage and the ability. To me that's an exciting challenge."

But one challenge Herman and other big bandleaders have not been able to meet successfully is the continuing disinterest of almost all record companies, and many radio stations, in the sounds of the big bands. Herman is a bit bitter about this situation, similar to that existing in the motion picture industry.

"The big record companies deal only in big numbers. Those big over-night hits. That's because most of them are run and guided by accountants."

However, just being able to play today's music still thrills him. Asked which of his many bands he likes the most, Herman's eyes light up and he replied eagerly, "I'm going to have next year."
To Jack
Very Best
