Jazz at Loeb Center

One of New York’s longest-running jazz concert series, Highlights in Jazz, will celebrate its 15th anniversary tomorrow evening with a concert at New York University’s Loeb Center. Among the musicians who will perform are Tito Puente (Latin percussionist), Phil Woods (alto saxophonist), Jon Faddis (trumpeter), John Pizzarelli Jr. (guitarist), Bob Mower (alto saxophonist), Tony Monti (pianist), Kenny Washington (drummer), James Williams (pianist) and at least one surprise guest.

The nonprofit series was started in 1973 by Jack Klein singer, an Assistant Attorney General for the State of New York, at the Theater de Lys and moved the next year to the Loeb Center on Washington Square South. It presents eight concerts a year.

“Most of our concerts are unstructured, unrehearsed jam sessions,” Mr. Klein singer said yesterday. “I love jam sessions, but almost no one does them anymore.” Tickets are $15 (60 for students) and can be bought at the New York University box office. Information: 998-9099.

Jazz review

Jack Klein singer’s “Highlights in Jazz” series, now in its 15th year, follows a tried-and-true formula of small mainstream jam sessions: dependable players playing dependable songs. It attracts the type of audience that lets out a huge, satisfied sigh when somebody announces that he’s about to play “Fascinatin’ Rhythm” or that old jam session warhorse, “Perdido.”

Thursday night’s concert at NYU’s Loeb Student Center was, ostensibly, a salute to pianist Dick Hyman, the series’ 14th salute to a living musician. Goodness knows, Hyman deserves a salute: he’s a versatile and well-respected pianist (and a living repository of early piano style), a musical director of numerous popular films (“Moonstruck,” most of Woody Allen’s recent movies), a longtime model of dignity and musical cathedrality. He even had a couple of Top 40 instrumental hits in the ‘50s and early ‘60s.

But during the 90-minute fast set, Hyman sat front row center and watched an impressive parade of veterans play a typical grab-bag of antiques that had little, specifically, to do with him.

The blue-chip lineup of Buddy Tate, Doc Cheatham, Hank Jones, Milt Hinton and Mel Lewis played a number; Tate, Cheatham and Jones each did a feature; Phil Bodner, Urbie Green and Roger Kellaway replaced Tate, Cheatham and Jones and that grouping did a number; Hinton, Green, Bodner and Kellaway each did a feature; and the entire company did “C Jam Blues.” A foolproof 90-minute hit. It was a salute to Dick Hyman it wasn’t.

Hyman finally mounted the stage for the second half and, quickly and succinctly, paid himself the best possible tribute: playing delightful solo versions of “Stella By Starlight,” “Blue Skies,” and James P. Johnson’s “Carolina Shout” (a tour de force of stride that was a musical banana cream pie), quartet versions of “Blue Monk” (with Green) and “Deed I Do” (with Bodner) and an everybody-on-stage rip through “Perdido.”

Review/Jazz

Some Elders Offer ‘Salute to Dick Hyman’

The eight musicians who played for a “Salute to Dick Hyman” at last Thursday’s “Highlights in Jazz” concert at the Loeb Auditorium of New York University brought an unusual amount of warmth and affection to this 14th salute to a living jazz musician that has been organized by the impresario Jack Kleininger over the past 15 years. Mr. Hyman, who played at the first “Highlights in Jazz” in 1973, has been a close and frequent associate with most of the musicians who came to salute him.

Forming two quintets, each man presented Mr. Hyman and the audience with an appropriately exemplary sample of his work as a soloist.

When Mr. Hyman finally got to the piano, he showed why he was being saluted as he stretched out on “Blue Skies” and rollicked through “Carolina Shout,” a composition by James P. Johnson, one of the early jazz stars whose work he has been instrumental in keeping before the public.
