June 2017

American Society of Criminology Division on Women and Crime.

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.unf.edu/dwctext

Part of the Criminology and Criminal Justice Commons

Recommended Citation

MEMBERSHIP
Membership in the Division on Women and Crime is open to all interested persons who are members of the American Society of Criminology in good standing. Persons may join the Division by paying special dues in addition to their regular ASC membership dues.

Individuals interested in joining the Division may contact the ASC Executive Director or fill out the application in this brochure and submit it along with a check for the special dues to:
Sarah Hall, ASC Executive Director
Division on Women and Crime
American Society of Criminology
1314 Kinnear Road
Columbus, Ohio 43212
(614) 292-9207

Yes! I am interested in joining the ASC Division on Women and Crime.

[ ] I am already an ASC member in good standing and am now paying the special Division dues.
[ ] I am also joining the ASC at this time and have enclosed both ASC dues and Division dues.

Name:
Address:
City:
State:
E-mail address:
Affiliation:
Phone numbers:
W: ( )
H: ( )

Comments or ideas for the Division:

Please remit to: Sarah Hall, Division on Women and Crime, The American Society of Criminology, 1314 Kinnear Road, Columbus, Ohio 43212, (614) 292-9207.

A Division of the American Society of Criminology
THE DIVISION ON WOMEN AND CRIME

PURPOSES
The Division on Women and Crime (DWC) is a constituent unit of The American Society of Criminology (ASC). Its special purposes are:

- To bring together all members of the ASC interested in issues related to women as professionals, victims and/or offenders of the criminal justice system, and to the variable of gender in the study of crime;
- To facilitate and encourage both research and theory development about gender, women and crime;
- To promote recognition of the achievements of women as scholars in the study of criminology through the Division's annual awards program;
- To encourage appropriate and effective teaching techniques and to stimulate curricular development for courses on gender, women and crime;
- To encourage networking and interaction among academics, researchers, practitioners and policymakers to further the understanding and resolution of problems pertaining to women as professionals, victims and offenders;
- To promote and organize conference sessions related to issues on gender, women and crime.

HISTORY
The Division on Women and Crime developed out of the growing interest in the study of gender and women as offenders, victims, and professional employees of the criminal systems.

In the early years of the ASC, individual papers on gender, women and crime were presented from time to time at the annual meetings. But the first panel session devoted solely to the subject was not formed until 1975. In that year, Freda Adler's Sisters in Crime and Rita Simon's Women in Crime had just been published and there was a burst of new interest in the subject. Some 150 persons came to hear papers at that first panel chaired by Freda Adler.

Despite this encouraging beginning, few criminologists seemed to believe that the study of women and crime was central to criminology. Some even questioned how much researchable material there was on the topic. Those who were interested in these issues and who saw gender as a major, though largely ignored, factor in the study of crime began to band together. First gathering on an informal basis, then as a special caucus, and finally as a prospective division within the ASC, members met and worked to ensure a place at all subsequent ASC meetings for papers on gender, women and crime.

By 1981 there were 48 such papers in the program; by 1983 the number of papers on women and crime had almost doubled to 92. Also by 1983 the work to attain divisional status within the ASC was completed. The Division on Women and Crime was the first division ever created within the ASC. The first formal elections were held in 1984 and Dr. PJ. Baunach became the new Division's first Chairperson.

Since that time, other divisions on International Criminology, Critical Criminology, and People of Color have also been developed. However, the Division on Women and Crime remains the largest and most active division within the ASC. Dozens of panel sessions on gender, women and crime are now routinely interspersed throughout the ASC Annual Meeting Program. In the 1990s the Division worked to support the election of the ASC's first women Presidents, and to sponsor policy proposals on decarceration of imprisoned women.

GOALS AND ACTIVITIES
To achieve its purposes, the Division:

- publishes a newsletter for its members,
- provides mentoring to members as requested,
- hosts a social hour and awards ceremony at the annual ASC meetings,
- works with the ASC Program Committee to schedule sessions on women and crime during the annual ASC conference,
- works with ASC Officers to promote the involvement of women on ASC committees and task groups,
- pursues issues of concern to the membership through its committees and task forces, and
- encourages all persons interested in these issues to join together in discussion and debate through its publications such as this brochure, a membership listserver, and our website (http://web.marshall.edu/divwmncrm/).

ORGANIZATION
Though it is a constituent unit of the ASC, the Division on Women and Crime has its own officers and committees who are elected by the Division members at the annual business meeting held during the ASC conference each November. Officers include a Chairperson, a Vice Chairperson and a Secretary. There is an Executive Board composed of the officers, the immediate past chair and vice chair, and three Executive Counselors elected at large. Any member of the Division in good standing is eligible to hold office.

The work of the DWC is primarily accomplished through committees, both standing and ad hoc. Among the standing committees of the Division are Programs, Nominations, Outreach, Newsletter, Student Affairs, and Awards. Ad hoc committees and task forces have included a Working Group on Sexualities, Task Forces on Women in Prison and Good Practices in the Discipline, and Ad Hoc Committees on celebrating the Division's 15th Anniversary and Feminist Seminars.
ORGANIZATION

Though it is a constituent unit of the ASC, the Division has its own officers and committees, who are elected by the Division members at the annual business meeting held during the ASC conference each November. Officers include a Chairperson, a Vice Chairperson and a Secretary. There is an Executive Board composed of the officers, the immediate past chair and vice chair, and three executive counselors elected at large. Any member of the Division in good standing is eligible to hold office.

The work of the Division is primarily accomplished through committees, both standing and ad hoc. Standing committees include:

• A Program Committee, which works with the ASC Program Committee to ensure that panels on women and crime are included in the annual conference and are not scheduled to overlap;
• A Membership Committee, which works to solicit new members and keep track of current members; and
• A Newsletter Committee, which compiles and publishes a Division newsletter at least twice a year.

Ad hoc committees are formed as needed.

MEMBERSHIP

Membership in the Division on Women and Crime is open to all interested persons who are members of the American Society of Criminology in good standing. Persons may join the Division by paying special dues of $5.00 in addition to their ASC membership dues.

Individuals interested in joining the Division may fill out the application in this brochure and submit it along with a check for $5.00 to:

Sarah Hall
Division on Women and Crime
American Society of Criminology
1314 Kinneal Road
Columbus, Ohio 43212
(614) 422-9207
ORGANIZATION

Though it is a constituent unit of the ASC, the Division has its own officers and committees, who are elected by the Division members at the annual business meeting held during the ASC conference each November. Officers include a Chairperson, a Vice Chairperson and a Secretary. There is an Executive Board composed of the officers, the immediate past chair and vice chair, and three executive counselors elected at large. Any member of the Division in good standing is eligible to hold office.

The work of the Division is primarily accomplished through committees, both standing and ad hoc. Standing committees include:

- A Program Committee, which works with the ASC Program Committee to ensure that panels on women and crime are included in the annual conference and are not scheduled to overlap;
- A Membership Committee, which works to solicit new members and keep track of current members; and
- A Newsletter Committee, which compiles and publishes a Division newsletter at least twice a year.

Ad hoc committees are formed as needed.

MEMBERSHIP

Membership in the Division on Women and Crime is open to all interested persons who are members of the American Society of Criminology in good standing. Persons may join the Division by paying special dues of $5.00 in addition to their ASC membership dues.

Individuals interested in joining the Division may fill out the application in this brochure and submit it along with a check for $5.00 to:

Sarah Hall
Division on Women and Crime
American Society of Criminology
1314 Kinnear Road
Columbus, Ohio 43212
(614) 422-9207
PURPOSES

The Division on Women and Crime is a constituent unit of The American Society of Criminology. Its special purposes are:

- To promote recognition of the achievements of women as scholars in the study of criminology;
- To bring together all members of the ASC interested in issues related to women as professionals, victims and/or offenders of the criminal justice system;
- To facilitate and encourage both research and theory development about women and crime;
- To encourage appropriate and effective teaching techniques and to stimulate curricular development for courses on women and crime;
- To encourage networking and interaction among academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to further the understanding and resolution of problems pertaining to women as professionals, victims and offenders;
- To organize conference sessions related to issues on women and crime.

GOALS AND ACTIVITIES

To achieve the above purposes, the Division publishes a newsletter for members of the Division at least twice a year, works with the ASC Program Committee to schedule sessions in women and crime during the annual ASC conference, works with ASC Officers to promote the involvement of women on ASC committees and task groups, and through publications such as this brochure encourages all persons interested in these issues to join together in discussion and debate.

Future goals of the Division include the establishment of an annual award in the ASC to honor major contributions to the topic matter of the Division, and organizing an entire issue of CRIMINOLOGY on the topic of women and crime. The identification of other goals consistent with the Division's purpose is an ongoing process.

HISTORY

The Division on Women and Crime developed out of the growing interest in the study of women as offenders, victims, and professional employees of the criminal system.

Over the years in the ASC, individual papers on women and crime had been presented at the annual meetings. But the first panel session devoted solely to the subject was not formed until 1975. In that year, Adler's SISTERS IN CRIME and Simon's WOMEN IN CRIME had just been published and there was a burst of new interest in the subject. Some 150 persons came to hear papers at that first panel chaired by Freda Adler.

Despite this encouraging beginning, few people really believed that the study of women and crime was central to criminology. Some even questioned how much researchable material there was on the topic. Those who were interested in these issues and who saw gender as a major factor, though largely ignored, factor in the study of crime began to band together. First on an informal basis, then as a special caucus, and finally as a prospective division within the ASC, members met and worked to ensure a place at all subsequent ASC meetings for papers on women and crime.

By 1981 there were 48 such papers in the program; in 1982 there were 73 papers and three roundtable discussions scheduled; in 1983 the number of papers on women and crime grew to 92. By 1983 the work to attain divisional status within the ASC was also completed. The first formal elections were held in 1984 and P. J. Baunach became the new Division's first Chairperson.
ORGANIZATION

Though it is a constituent unit of the ASC, the Division has its own officers and committees, who are elected by the Division members at the annual business meeting held during the ASC conference each November. Officers include a Chairperson, a Vice Chairperson and a Secretary. There is an Executive Board composed of the officers, the immediate past chair and vice chair, and three executive counselors elected at large. Any member of the Division in good standing is eligible to hold office.

The work of the Division is primarily accomplished through committees, both standing and ad hoc. Standing committees include:

- A Program Committee, which works with the ASC Program Committee to ensure that panels on women and crime are included in the annual conference and are not scheduled to overlap;
- A Membership Committee, which works to solicit new members and keep track of current members; and
- A Newsletter Committee, which compiles and publishes a Division newsletter at least twice a year.

Ad hoc committees are formed as needed.

MEMBERSHIP

Membership in the Division on Women and Crime is open to all interested persons who are members of the American Society of Criminology in good standing. Persons may join the Division by paying special dues of $5.00 in addition to their ASC membership dues.

Individuals interested in joining the Division may fill out the application in this brochure and submit it along with a check for $5.00 to:

Sarah Hall
Division on Women and Crime
American Society of Criminology
1314 Kinnear Road
Columbus, Ohio 43212
(614) 422-9207
Yes! I am interested in joining the ASC Division on Women and Crime.
PURPOSES

The Division on Women and Crime is a constituent unit of The American Society of Criminology. Its special purposes are:

- To promote recognition of the achievements of women as scholars in the study of criminology;
- To bring together all members of the ASC interested in issues related to women as professionals, victims and/or offenders of the criminal justice system;
- To facilitate and encourage both research and theory development about women and crime;
- To encourage appropriate and effective teaching techniques and to stimulate curricular development for courses on women and crime;
- To encourage networking and interaction among academics, researchers, practitioners and policy-makers to further the understanding and resolution of problems pertaining to women as professionals, victims and offenders;
- To organize conference sessions related to issues on women and crime.

HISTORY

The Division on Women and Crime developed out of the growing interest in the study of women as offenders, victims, and professional employees of the criminal system.

Over the years in the ASC, individual papers on women and crime had been presented at the annual meetings. But the first panel session devoted solely to the subject was not formed until 1975. In that year, Adler's SISTERS IN CRIME and Simon's WOMEN IN CRIME had just been published and there was a burst of new interest in the subject. Some 150 persons came to hear papers at that first panel chaired by Freda Adler.

Despite this encouraging beginning, few people really believed that the study of women and crime was central to criminology. Some even questioned how much researchable material there was on the topic. Those who were interested in these issues and who saw gender as a major, though largely ignored, factor in the study of crime began to band together. First on an informal basis, then as a special caucus, and finally as a prospective division within the ASC, members met and worked to ensure a place at all subsequent ASC meetings for papers on women and crime.

By 1981 there were 48 such papers in the program; in 1982 there were 73 papers and three roundtable discussions scheduled; in 1983 the number of papers on women and crime grew to 92. By 1983 the work to attain divisional status within the ASC was also completed. The first formal elections were held in 1984 and J. Baunach became the new Division's first Chairperson.